

In many cases the Anglicized forms were actually closely related to the basic Gaelic surnames mu "O's" as in the. Cass of the name Daly. The final doom of the Gaelic surnames came as a result of an establishment of the English language among the lush, this circumstance caused the English for for granted and considered as- natural. In recent times, the Gaelic original has been re-adopted b: This trend back to the Gaelic 'will naturally spread as the ancient language gradually resumes! ✓ ~ tread, The common definition of the O'Dalalgh surname today is, "deriving from Detach meaning 'one vivo assemblies'; the root word is Dial, now the official title of the parliament of the Republic of truant possible to the long tradition of scholarship and poetic achievement associated with those who b Gaelic Ireland had a place of honor at the tribal dais as a man of learning and a poet, Other evidence points to an even older more significant meaning, based on the claim by the page offspring of their gods. This evidence is found on several Gorham stones which contain the oldest writing. An example from the Goren Stone; DALLO MAQA Maori MA Qi ERACIAS MAQI L! And one from K.ifkenny BRANITTOS MAQI bears DDALLOS. These inscriptions appear to invoke either pagan g~ figures with names similar to the ancestral "Detach". , 6... third foghorn, Monataggert !I further speas sons of the eponymous ancestor (Dali). In many cases the mythological ancestor vvas female. DALAG N I MAQ ! DALI From this evidence a with times of antiquity in Ireland, it would appear that there are reasonable grounds for assumer "O'Dalalgh" has agedly or mythological stgnificance.Irjdaed, it provides more logical probable m O'Dalalgh than the more popular versions built almost entirely on definitions given in modern die parts of the family nine., Almost without exception the armorial motto of the O'Dalalgh has been featured as "Doe et Regis ! O'Dalalgh had used .a Gaelic motto prior to the adoption of "Doe et Regis Delis" by those O'Dalalgh' their loyalty to the reigning English monarchs. Around the turn of the century, an Irish motto: "All vivify and Strong, was found to have existed among the O'Dalaigh's of Galway and its origin being Agues Mir" is clearly descriptive of the O'Dalalgh crest whereas the usual one "Doe Et Regis FL dells", I and King is neither descriptive of the crest nor of the {mostly} disloyal family of O'Dalaigh's,

O'DALY

ERIN GO BRAGH

In many cases the Anglicized forms were actually closely related to the basic Gaelic surnames mu "O's" as in the. Cass of the name Daly. The final doom of the Gaelic surnames came as a result of an establishment of the English language among the lush, this circumstance caused the English for granted and considered as- natural. In recent times, the Gaelic original has been re-adopted b: This trend back to the Gaelic 'will naturally spread as the ancient language gradually resumes! ✓ ~ tread, The common definition of the O'Dalalgh surname today is, "deriving from Detach meaning 'one vivo assemblies'; the root word is Dial, now the official title of the parliament of the Republic of truant possible to the long tradition of scholarship and poetic achievement associated with those who b Gaelic Ireland had a place of honor at the tribal dais as a man of learning and a poet, Other evidence points to an even older more significant meaning, based on the claim by the page offspring of their gods. This evidence is found on several Gorham stones which contain the oldest writing. An example from the Goren Stone; DALLO MAQA Maori MA Qi ERACIAS MAQI LI! And one from K.ifkenny BRANITTOS MAQI bears DDALLOS. These inscriptions appear to invoke either pagan g~ figures with names similar to the ancestral "Detach". , 6... third foghorn, Monataggert !! further speas sons of the eponymous ancestor (Dali). In many cases the mythological ancestor vvas female. DALAG N I MAQ ! DALI From this evidence a with times of antiquity in Ireland, it would appear that there are reasonable grounds for assumer "O'Dalalgh" has agedly or mythological stgnificance.Irjdaed, it provides more logical probable m O'Dalalgh than the more popular versions built almost entirely on definitions given in modern die parts of the family nine., Almost without exception the armorial motto of the O'Dalalgh has been featured as "Doe et Regis ! O'Dalalgh had used .a Gaelic motto prior to the adoption of "Doe et Regis Delis" by those O'Dalalgh' their loyalty to the reigning English monarchs. Around the turn of the century, an Irish motto: "All vivify and Strong, was found to have existed among the O'Da-laigh's of Galway and its origin being Agues Mir" is clearly descriptive of the O'Dalalgh crest whereas the usual one "Doe Et Regis FL dells", I and King is neither descriptive of the crest nor of the {mostly) disloyal family of O'Dalaigh's